The name T. C. Lewis & Co. Properties has been passed down 6 generations to T. Cory Lewis who is the owner of T. C. Lewis & Co. Properties.

His family has a long history of entrepreneurship, and he says that he is only trying to live up to the name. He graduated from ETSU with a business degree and saw the need for a “one-stop-shop” in real estate and development. Cory has combined all aspects of real estate and houses them all under one roof at the new Tri-Cities office at 6315 Kingsport Highway in Boones Creek. He has an experienced staff on-hand daily, and agents on call 24/7 to help clients with all types of needs- buying, selling, building, or investing. Cory has brought his cousins Jeff and Luke Stillwell and their excavation business into the mix, and now says, “T. C. Lewis & Co. Properties is the standard of comparison in full-service real estate, development, excavation, constructions, and planning.”

They provide unrivaled advertising for sellers hoping to sell and sell fast. It's a boutique-office atmosphere with a collection of agents who are well-trained and well-versed in all types of real estate. There is an in-house financial lending consultant for first-time home buyers or anyone who may be uncomfortable about strolling into the bank. A construction consultant who is a licensed, general contractor is also on-hand to talk to buyers or sellers about improvements to be made to a home. They understand that buying or selling a home always comes with its own set of issues and reasons, and they always work to exceed clients' expectations. This special attention and care provided isn't something that can be found at a large, franchise office.

T. C. Lewis & Co. Properties has projects currently under construction in all sizes and price ranges throughout the Tri-Cities, including: Carolina Cove next to Boone Lake in North Johnson City, the Hills at Waterford on Boones Creek Road, Raceway Villas next to the Bristol Motorspeedway, and The Clover Street Project just off of State of Franklin Road.
