Upon Meeting Cory Lewis of TC Lewis & Co, you get the distinct feeling that this guy could talk to anyone, about anything, and make a friend just about anywhere he goes. His easy affability and self-confidence project all the strength of a self-made man.

He'll be the first to tell you, though, that he isn't working solo. Lewis readily honors his father, brother and grandfather (all of them with the initials T.C. Lewis) and his unwaveringly supportive girlfriend Haize as integral to his success. With a degree in business and an eclectic professional background ranging from working in a marina to a job with the Toronto Blue Jays, Lewis tackles anything a business can throw at him.

And business is thriving, in part due to Lewis' commitment to protecting our region's assets. "We need responsible development, green building, and a re-development of some of the area's downtown districts," he says, noting that he realizes such notions right now are unusual coming from a developer.

Although he's still sometimes stereotyped as "too young" to be the head of a successful real estate, construction and property management company, Lewis laughs about such attitudes, admitting, "it's fun when I set a meeting with someone and they think I'm there to offer them refreshments before the meeting with Mr. Lewis."
